GERMANY DECLARES WAR ON RUSSIA

PARIS, Aug. 1.—It is authoritatively, but not officially, stated that Austria-Hungary has made representations to the effect that she is willing to submit her quarrel with Serbia to an international tribunal and withdraw her troops from Servian territory.

RUSSIAN AND GERMAN TROOPS EXCHANGE SHOTS

KAISER VIE WS CZAR'S STAND FOR MOBILIZATION AS PERSONAL INSULT

BERLIN, AUG. 1.—GERMANY HAS DECLARED WAR AGAINST RUSSIA.

The announcement followed the failure of Russia to answer Germany's ultimatum regarding the mobilization of troops which expired at noon.

That Germany would be forced to take this step was forecasted when the news was received here that the German ambassador had been handed his passports at St. Petersburg.

This was tantamount to a declaration of war, and Germany had no other course.

This is the official version given out explaining the Kaiser's precipitate action:

"The Czar had telegraphed the Kaiser begging him to intervene between Russia and Austria on behalf of peace. This the Kaiser did immediately, putting himself in telegraphic communication with the Czar and exchanging messages with him through the following day. In addition the German Emperor invited the assistance of Sir Edward Grey.

"Late Thursday a more hopeful opinion prevailed in Berlin. Later there came a thunderbolt in the news from the German ambassador in St. Petersburg, Count Pourtales, that the Czar had ordered the complete mobilization of the Russian army and navy in spite of his appeal to the Kaiser and of the fact that the two Emperors had been in continual communication throughout the day.

"This the Kaiser viewed as a personal insult. Naturally the incident ended Germany's patience and her efforts to preserve peace."

Germany's move is the first of what is likely to be the greatest war in the history of civilization. By its position Germany is backing up Austria in its struggle against Serbia and her declaration of war will undoubtedly draw into the conflict France and England.

The latter two countries will, under the Triple Entente, be forced to side with the Czar.

Italy, the other member of the Triple Alliance, has pledged her neutrality in the struggle and thus Germany and Austria will be forced to fight it out alone with the other three great powers.

FRENCH PRESIDENT SOUNDS PEACE NOTE

PARIS, Aug. 1.—President Poincaré tonight issued the following proclamation:

"For some days past the states of Europe have been considerably agitated, and notwithstanding the efforts of diplomacy, the horizon has darkened. At the present hour a greater part of the nations have mobilized their forces. Even the countries protected by neutrality conventions have deemed it their duty to take this measure as a precaution.

"The powers whose constitutional or military legislation differs from that of the others have also taken this step. It is the duty of the President of the Republic to call attention to this state of affairs and to express his sincere desire for peace."

RULERS WHO ARE TO SETTLE ISSUE BY SWORD

On the left, Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany, who has declared war on Russia. On the right, Czar Nicholas, whose refusal to stop mobilization precipitated the clash of arms that is likely to involve all Europe.

KITCHENER TO LEAD BRITISH FORCES

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Owing to the critical war situation, Earl Kitchener has been recalled from Egypt to take command of the British army.

Great Britain's war preparations continue night and day. At Aldershot, the military headquarters, a large number of troop trains are waiting on the sidings with steam up. The service corps is working day and night loading baggage and war material. Searchlights blaze over Aldershot camp tonight.

Great activity prevails at Grimsby, where heavy forces of troops are held in readiness. Sixty thousand territorials went under canvas today on the annual fortnight's training.

Another development is the guarding of all waterworks and electric power houses supplying the principal towns.

Prospect of a food shortage is being discussed everywhere. It is estimated the present supply of Great Britain will last for six weeks. The press is warning the people to lay in stores of food.

A significant order was issued by the War Office today to the effect that sentries shall not be posted alone, but in couples.

FRENCH ARMY IS MOBILIZING; ENGLAND LOYAL TO HER ALLIES

BERLIN, AUG. 1.—A RUSSIAN FRONTIER PATROL FIRED ON A GERMAN PATROL NEAR PROSTKENB THIS AFTERNOON. THE FIRE WAS RETURNED BY THE GERMANS, BUT THERE WERE NO CASUALTIES.

LATE DEVELOPMENTS IN EUROPEAN CRISIS:

The nations of Europe are rapidly approaching the general clash which may involve more than 31,000,000 men.

Germany has declared war on Russia. She is mobilizing all her reserves and will have an army of 6,200,000 to put in the field against Russia's 10,000,000.

The German ambassador at St. Petersburg, in the name of his government, sent the formal declaration of hostilities to the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs at the Russian capital. He has been recalled to Berlin.

France is mobilizing her army of 5,000,000 men and will have the work completed by midnight Sunday. She may be the next to declare war. The time for the French reply to Germany's ultimatum has been extended until noon Monday by mutual agreement.

England is believed to be preparing for mobilization of her 2,730,000 men. Her great war fleets are already in motion, the strongest being in the North Sea and the second fleet in the Mediterranean.

In the meantime, Great Britain announces that her policy is merely one of "watchful waiting," and that she has not yet decided to take active part with her co-partners in the triple entente.

King George has sent an urgent personal appeal for peace to the Czar, but apparently without avail. It is reported that the King is suffering from a nervous breakdown, the result of the tremendous strain.

Italy, by proclaiming neutrality, has virtually separated from Germany and Austria, her partners in the triple alliance, although she has put 500,000 of her 2,400,000 troops under arms. She will fight only if attacked.

Communication between the nations of Europe except by the governments has ceased. England is isolated by the severance of all wire connection with the Continent.

Austrian monitors in the Danube have renewed the bombardment of Belgrade.

The Servian War Office admits the Servian Army has retired before the Austrian advance on the Bosnian frontier and along the southern bank of the Drina. The Servians, particularly in their own mountain passes and in the lake

France Urges U. S. Transports Be Sent

PARIS, Aug. 1.—Cabled suggestions were sent to the Washington government that United States transport ships be sent to convey to America those Americans who wish to leave this country for their own. Hundreds of American women, lacking and being unable to obtain cash for travel, checks and other papers, are greatly embarrassed. Two of the older and best hotels here will close tomorrow. Many Americans, distressed in spirit, will have to seek other quarters.

MOBILIZATION OF GREAT FRENCH
ARMY BEGINS TODAY---BRITISH
WARNED TO STORE THEIR FOOD

Norway and Sweden, in official government decrees, declare their complete neutrality in the present war crisis.

(Special Cable to The Boston American.)

"The French government has never been directly or indirectly led to believe that Great Britain was pledged to any particular method of discharging her obligations to France, and, although she will remain strictly to the spirit and letter of the understanding, His Majesty's government has not decided if it will interfere, or, if so, when it will interfere in the European war.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—The French government today ordered a general mobilization of the army. The mobilization will begin tomorrow. France's army on a war footing consists of 4,000,000 men.

Three Things Necessary in Treating Skin Diseases

Pathos was mingled with the patriotic joy over the mobilization orders. Hundreds of women burst into tears as they read the proclamation.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 1.—The German Ambassador and his staff left here tonight.

King George of England in Nervous Collapse Over Strain of War Menace

BRITISH KING UNABLE TO MEET MINISTERS WHO HAD BEEN HURRIEDLY CALLED TO PALACE

Forced to Leave Conference With Premier Earlier in Day by Sudden Attack of Weakness

By W. ORTON TEWSON.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—King George has broken down under the tremendous strain of the last few days.

Last night he was unable to receive Sir Edward Grey, and during his interview this morning with Premier Asquith, His Majesty had to break off the conference for a quarter of an hour, owing to a fit of weakness.

The King is suffering from a nervous breakdown, and during the past two days his name has not appeared in the court circular and all private engagements have been cancelled.

He received Lord Buxton yesterday, but the interview did not last for more than a few minutes, and later in the evening the Foreign Office was informed that the King could not see Sir Edward Grey, who had been summoned to the Palace earlier.

Envoys on Verge of Panic.

There was another long meeting of the Cabinet today, at which Britain's position in regard to taking part in the coming struggle was discussed. It was able to state that the position rests much as it did yesterday, namely, the government is in favor of "watchful waiting."

This view has been officially conveyed to both the French and Russian ambassadors in London and for the past twenty-four hours these diplomats have been in a state verging on panic at Great Britain's attitude.

Sunday Cabinet Session.

They are jointly and severally frequent visitors at No. 10 Downing street and are using every means in their power to get the Cabinet to take a more favorable view of their countries' interests, but so far without avail.

As an indication of the seriousness of the situation a further meeting of the Cabinet has been called for tomorrow morning, when the discussion of the matter will be resumed.

King George V. of England, whose collapse from nervous strain over war peril is reported from London.

BULLETINS

LONDON, Aug. 1.—A Central News dispatch says that Germany is mobilizing. An official message from Berlin states that the Kaiser has ordered the mobilization of the entire military and naval forces of Germany.

ATHENS, Aug. 1.—A dispatch received early today says Semendria-on-the-Danube has been destroyed by Austrian fire. Its capture is not, however, confirmed. The Serbian Premier wires the Serbian legation here that the bombardment of Belgrade was re-commenced by Austrians yesterday at dawn.

ROME, Aug. 1.—Many men on both sides are reported to have fallen at Leishnitz, in the most important battle yet fought in the campaign, according to the Secolo's war correspondent at Nish, the new Serbian capital. A few hundred Serbs held several thousand Austrians in check over five hours, only to be beaten back at nightfall.

SYDNEY, Aug. 1.—The warlike conditions in Europe have caused the suspension of the practice cruise of the Australian fleet. Several of the vessels have returned to Sydney.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—A Reuter dispatch from Ymuiden states that an amateur wireless operator has interrupted a message from the Norddeich station, ordering all German steamers to go to the nearest neutral port with all speed.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 1.—The French Minister of War officially notified the Belgian government today that France will respect the neutrality of Belgium.

NISH, Serbia, Aug. 1.—The Serbian government today admitted that Serb troops had been defeated by Austrians near Fatcha, Bosnia. In a battle lasting all day the Serbians lost 100 killed and 200 wounded, but inflicted heavy losses on their foes. The battle occurred on the day following the bombardment of Belgrade. The Serbians fought desperately, but finally had to withdraw, leaving the pass on the south side of the river Drina open to the Austrians, who are now slowly advancing into Serbia.

DELCASSE MADE WAR MINISTER OF FRANCE

LONDON, Aug. 1.—A Paris dispatch reports that Premier Delcasse has made changes in the

RUSSIANS GREET GERMANY'S DECLARATION OF WAR WITH THE WILDEST ENTHUSIASM

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 1.—Count Von Pourtales, the German Ambassador, officially notified the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs that Germany had declared war against Russia at 7:30 o'clock this evening. Two hours later an announcement of the news was made to the people and the most impressive demonstration of enthusiastic patriotism that St. Petersburg has ever witnessed was the result.

The streets tonight represent a wonderful spectacle. The Novosky Prospekt and others of the principal thoroughfares are packed with crowds of cheering people. There are processions and parades in every section of the city and huge banners, bearing the portrait of Emperor Nicholas, are borne aloft, lit by the glow of hundreds of flaming torches.

On many street corners patriotic oratory is being dispensed, the speakers using every effort to increase, if that were possible, the patriotic fervor of the crowds.

Before the Kazan Cathedral a different scene meets the eye. A huge throng of citizens of every class stand bareheaded, listening to the strains of the national anthem, rising from a thousand throats and accompanied by the Cathedral organ.

In all churches throughout the city special services are being held tonight and prayers for victory said.

French Cabinet whereby Theophile Delcasse becomes Minister of War and Eugene Georges Clemenceau, the ex-Premier, joins the Ministry.

By this move the cabinet of France is much strengthened, and in a manner which will prove immensely popular to the people of the nation. Delcasse, who was formerly in the cabinet, is known as an avowed enemy of Germany and one who is likely to take strenuous measures for a military advance towards Berlin in case the republic is drawn into a war.

Clemenceau, who was formerly premier of the government, is equally popular with the masses and is recognized as one of France's most able statesmen.

Scores, Ignorant of Cancelled Sailing, Seek Pier of Hamburg Liner

GUARDS AT THE GANGWAY OF 'AMERIKA,' BAR TOURISTS FROM SHIP AT COMMONWEALTH PIER

Giant Steamship With Holds Bursting With Million Cargos Held Here on Account of War.

Fifty persons, men, women and children, bound to sail on the Hamburg-American liner Amerika yesterday, and coming from all parts of New England and the West, were turned away by a guard of sailors acting with a squad of about a dozen police to prevent any more getting on board the ship. With the sailing of the big ship tomorrow, the belief in the actual neutrality of the United States is being shaken.

At the Commonwealth pier the post-ponement drew a crowd of speculative sightseers.

Not a person except those upon business was permitted on board the vessel. Several hundred persons had been posted to sail on the liner. A large number had learned of the postponement before leaving time for the steamer.

SENT TO HOTELS.

Several persons from Western points when they came to the steamer were directed to the hotels, where they were told that the ship was not sailing. The steamer was not sailing because of the war. The steamer was not sailing because of the war. The steamer was not sailing because of the war.

BOSTON AUSTRIANS SURE OF COUNTRY'S SUCCESS

War Brought About, They Say, Through Machinations of Russia, Which Wants to Humble Austria.

Austrian citizens in Boston are confident of the victory of their arms in any European conflict, and freely assert that Austria can win. They say that the war was brought about by the machinations of Russia, which wants to humble Austria.

"The war was brought about by the machinations of Russia, which wants to humble Austria," said one of the speakers. "Austria can win. The war was brought about by the machinations of Russia, which wants to humble Austria."

MEN OF MANY TONGUES LEAVE HUB TO FIGHT

Sixteen men, representing a half-dozen languages or dialects, left the port of Boston by the Leyland Line steamer Devonian late yesterday bound for Liverpool, and thence to participate in the Austro-Serbian war. They are men of many tongues, and it is thought that these men will be able to stand in to keep them from fighting out all the issues of the war.

These foreigners had their own fares. They have organized, and have a two or more of them, but each responded either to the call he received from home, or was rendered home by the general call and eager to participate in the glory or duty of the war.

Two of them arrived as early as nine in the morning, the rest came in the afternoon.

WILHELMINA SOUGHT U.S. AID TOWARD PEACE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Unofficially, the German declaration of war upon Russia was received by President Wilson and Secretary Bryan, while they were holding a lengthy conference on the European situation.

It is understood that official information followed almost immediately through the foreign office of Holland.

Important dispatches from Holland reached the State Department and were rushed to the White House.

The conference Secretary Bryan and he might later in the evening make a statement.

Whether there will be similar action in the other European capitals. It is expected that practically all the European governments will leave their affairs in the hands of the United States as the one great neutral power.

The German Ambassador at St. Petersburg was reported to the State Department as having taken his passport.

During the day the Greek minister and Secretary Bryan conferred.

Formerly the United States battleship USS Oregon was in the harbor. This ship will be subject to attack by Austria and Germany should Greece join the war.

The Queen of Holland had been previously trying to get out of the country. She had the aid of the United States in the effort.

As soon as the official declaration of war between Germany and Russia is received, the President and Secretary Bryan will prepare a proclamation of neutrality. This proclamation will furnish official notice of the real intentions of this country concerning the European struggle.

Washington diplomats hold that under its alliance with Great Britain, Japan cannot enter into the European struggle. Germany, Italy or Austria should attack the British ships or possessions in Asia.

American mail for Europe left at nine today in spite of the failure of the vessel to sail. It having been transferred to the oceanic.

The postoffice department announced that it would suspend the purchase of foreign money to meet the balance of $10,000 a day in favor of Europe in the international money order service. This suspension is due to increased rates of exchange.

American money orders are sent to Europe to the extent of half a million dollars a day, while but $100,000 worth of European orders are sent here.

E. P. CARVER GIVES STATUS OF GERMANY AND HER SHIPS

Noted Authority on International Law Will Write Daily Articles For American.

First with the news, whether in peace or war is the Boston AMERICAN. The army of readers of this newspaper from to and of New England will be given an opportunity by day, while the terrific struggle in Europe lasts of the war news from the pen of the ablest authority in America.

Every day our readers will receive valuable lessons on some phase of the war from Eugene P. Carver, of the Boston law firm of Carver, Wardner, Cavanaugh & Walker, No. 110 State street, with office in New York at No. 27 Cedar street.

Mr. Carver was elected one of the vice-presidents of the International Law Association at Berlin, in 1908. He is also a member of the executive council of that association. He is an authority on international admiralty, commercial and marine insurance law, not only in America, but in foreign nations as well. He is one of the managers of the American Record or American Lloyd, which is the American classification of ships, a correspondent of Knight, Lippincott, Bureau Veritas (French), and also of the German, Norwegian, Swedish, Danish and Dutch Shipping Associations. As a director in no less than six insurance companies, he has also had a practical experience in shipping matters, and is the sole owner of Ship Africa, the last square rigged American ship, which now lies in New York harbor, and is the only ship that sails from Boston.

ARTICLE EIGHT DAS.

At the request of the AMERICAN and for the benefit of the merchants and those who may be interested or engaged in exporting and importing merchandise to or from ports in other parts in the United States, Mr. Carver has consented to contribute a short article each day with the object of assisting or instructing those who may be interested in the commercial welfare of the business community.

He will, from time to time, discuss questions of Contraband of War.

Blockade, the status of Private Property at Sea, Prize, War Risk, and the course that it may be well for merchants to take under certain circumstances. As it seems necessary, he will also refer to the laws of other nations in order that the positions may be clearly stated. The articles, as far as possible, will be devoted of all legal verbiage, but of necessity may contain some technical terms. But there will be made plain to the busy man on the street or in the counting room and the lawyer.

The AMERICAN has assigned a number of its staff to consider all matters of fact that may have a bearing on the war from a local business standpoint. It desires all communications of persons who may be interested to write to the AMERICAN, marking their interest "International," and will be published from day to day.

The opening topic is: What is the status of Germany and German ships?

By EUGENE P. CARVER

We are met with this question wherever we are and many of the newspapers are unable to answer in a manner satisfactory to their readers.

The German empire is a federation of States which formed the empire in April, 1871, and at that time adopted a written constitution. The King of Prussia is the Emperor of Germany and the legislative authority is vested in the Reichstag, or Imperial Council and the Reichstag of Imperial Diet.

The Emperor has the sole right of legislation on all matters of foreign affairs and all matters of the army (except in Bavaria) and navy, commerce, posts and telegraphs and railways as far as they are deemed necessary for the defense of the country. Under article 16 of the constitution the Emperor, with the consent of the Reichstag, has the right to state that the welfare of the empire requires that the provisions of the constitution

Time Table for War News

Here is the difference in time between Boston and the capital of the nations involved in the Austro-Serbian trouble. When it is may be declared in operation and that a state of war exists and this will apply to all of the belligerents of the empire, except Italy.

7:00 p.m.	at	St. Petersburg

NEUTRALITY LAW.

This has been done and in effect what we call martial law exists on the same state of affairs as we now have in Vera Cruz, Mexico.

The ship of Germany are in local effect a part of the territory of the country and under the law the steamship American is a belligerent and is subject to the direction of her captors.

That is why the different German ships have been instructed not to leave port or to return to port, provided the port is a neutral one. As there is little to be won by a German ship in England, all German ships are ordered to come to America port, where they have been asked to show how ships like the American will be allowed to remain here.

CAN SHIP BE IT 24 HOURS.

In case of actual hostilities or in case of a blockade of a port of a neutral port, a nation will be required to allow a neutral ship to pass through its waters in a neutral port, provided the ship is not otherwise subject to seizure, and no such rule exists, the neutral port is a neutral port. In case of an armed ship, however, no such rule exists, the neutral port is a neutral port. The international status is, in short, changing and the subject is a very complex one, and will be very much interested upon the current of events.

The New Studebaker

One-Profits Cars Because They Are Studebaker Manufactured Cars

Today—or tomorrow—go to the Studebaker store and see the new Studebaker models, FOUR and SIX.

Two types of each—five-passenger SIX and seven-passenger SIX; FOUR Touring Car and FOUR Roadster.

You will find them competing with cars that sell at prices $500 higher; and you will also find them showing higher quality throughout.

Studebaker prices are lower because these cars are completely manufactured in Studebaker plants, carry but one profit, and impose no middleman's tax on the buyer.

There is only one way by which Studebaker quality can be put into a "Four" or a "Six" to sell at Studebaker prices.

That is the Studebaker way, which means complete manufacturing and the elimination of the parts middlemen and their extra profit; not the assembly of semi-manufactured wares.

Complete manufacturing, its economies and the excess value it puts into the cars represent the Studebaker ideal.

In the case of the Studebaker, millions of dollars are invested in plants, machinery and special equipment.

Our huge production and sales turn our investments into manufacturing economies—we can well afford equipment the cost of which must be prohibitive to any producer whose output is smaller than Studebaker.

For example, we maintain the largest and most completely equipped laboratories in the automobile industry, which not only work out the special formulae for Studebaker steels, but test and analyze the steels to be certain they are up to specifications.

We maintain huge heat-treating plants for the heat-treatment of vital parts, like gears, axle shafts, front axles, etc.

We make our drop forgings in our own forge shops.

We cast and machine and build complete every Studebaker motor.

We make our springs in our own spring plant.

We make our bodies and tops in our own body and top factories.

In short, we make a greater proportion of the parts for Studebaker cars than other producers make for their cars.

And being complete manufacturers, we can and do make the parts of Studebaker cars of better, stronger, longer-wearing materials; and put better value into the cars at a stated price.

Studebaker in the new Studebaker and you will see the result of Studebaker complete manufacturing.

If you are not expert enough to appreciate this value, ask the advice of some man who is expert.

He will tell you that the way the Studebaker sits in the road is due to its perfect balance, and that, in turn, is due to scientific design—complete manufacturing.

He will tell you that the lack of vibration is due to perfect fit and alignment of parts—again the result of complete manufacturing.

You will learn that heat-treatment of parts makes them stronger and last longer.

And you know that light weight means economy of gasoline and oil and tires.

Through motor refinement and up-to-date design these cars have power in excess of all requirements.

You will be delighted with the clean simplicity of the motors; their perfect accessibility; and you will see that you can care for a Studebaker with the least time and effort.

We would advise you to waste no time in seeing the new cars.

Delivery can be had at once of either model; and the best motoring season is before us.

When you shop around, keep your mental impressions of Studebaker value always before you for comparison; and remember that this value is the great result of Studebaker volume and Studebaker complete manufacturing.

The players are Mae and Sue against Flo and Jen.
The trumps are diamonds.
FLO—Whose lead?
MAE—Who made it? Oh, I did, Jen, lead.
JEN—Wait until I sort my cards.
FLO—Are you going to put a blue pegnum over that gray skirt, Sue?
SUE—I think so, I've seen the color.
FLO (leading card of spades)—Mine and gray?
SUE—Yes, the bodice is blue and gray, too, and—
MAE—That's what you'd call a reunion of the North and South—
FLO—For merry sakes, someone play for my jack
MAE—Speaking of jacks, have you seen Jack Boyce lately?
SUE (playing eight of spades)—I saw him, he was with—
FLO (playing ace of spades)—I bet Mae'll trump it.
MAE—I'd like to see Jack, he promised (plays king of spades).
FLO (trump trick; look out, Jen, she'll trump spades; see what she played)
SUE—Here, no talking across the table; say Mae, I had to play second hand low, or is it second hand high? I never remember.
FLO (leading five of spades)—It's high or is it low?
SUE—I don't put your head in there with an ace.
FLO—And you had another and played that king?
SUE—I saw Clara King yesterday; she's got the peskiest diamonds.
MAE (picking up card)—Vr Wright gave it to her?
FLO (is it my lead?) Of course, he does.
JEN—She'll never marry him. Lead, someone.
FLO (looking at trick)—Oh, yes, I took that. (She leads nine of diamonds)

For the Tired Actor Man,
By J. Willard Connely

pounce upon and devour the young ozones with alarming voraciousness.

It is to enfilade the actors or help, who step into this spider parlor will feel that every power has been expanded. If it increases their power to talk about themselves, the machine will more than serve its purpose, because one of our great national calamities is the excessive modesty of the actor.

It is further said under the same heading that these actors will feel as Adam and Eve felt on the Eden farm in the world's springtime. Simply, the world is mine—I don't care whether you love me or not.

The subway tapped to get the current, which is so large that it could be obtained from any ordinary bus. At every turn, the Pop Room is in operation, the subway tapping men in sympathy for the actor.

The Buedeker had made it clear to us why it was impossible to get a hold on the Deep Lovers. Thus, briefly, is the reason. A 100-watt light bulb consumes 120 volts, a 40-watt bulb consumes 100 volts, and a 60-watt bulb consumes 80 volts. The 20-watt bulb, which should be right in the middle of the Northern Hemisphere, similarly, consumes 60 volts of electricity. The salt jars, to let it all water and sodium of salt and water where the town is no license. Other

Connected to this condenser is a large reservoir three feet high by nine feet in diameter, to be filled in case any Elks drop in. The secondary winding of the resonator is 2,500 turns. That would give 500 Elks five turns each, which is all the beer any Elk should have.

We were talking to a party named Kingsley at the Palace last night. He is the old King Beadeer of the place, and said as how he could show us a few purple currents that were being advertised by the purple folk for pie. We said sure, let's see em, but don't squeeze em on us.

So we went up a mysterious winding elevator to a sea-green door. You're guessed it. We felt a little more entering late, you know—death house. Everything electric was there but the chair. One had to stand up and get his

The room was horribly technical looking; full of what appeared that you don't know anything about so you read a book on them and know less. The Kinsey party started to tell us how simple it is. They may have been right, but I'm sure electrically, as he said, but he didn't realize how less intelligent it is a bloody blood relation of Simon Schuster. The music was turned on, the lights off, and a milky glow over the things commenced to play tag across the opposite wall. The lights were dimmed until the spotlight reached one jolt per volt. If Kinsey's tendency ever takes any of that stuff she'll no longer be called the cyclonic Eveleen. It'll be a something like Nitro-Glycerine Eve, or Five Feet of Dynamite.

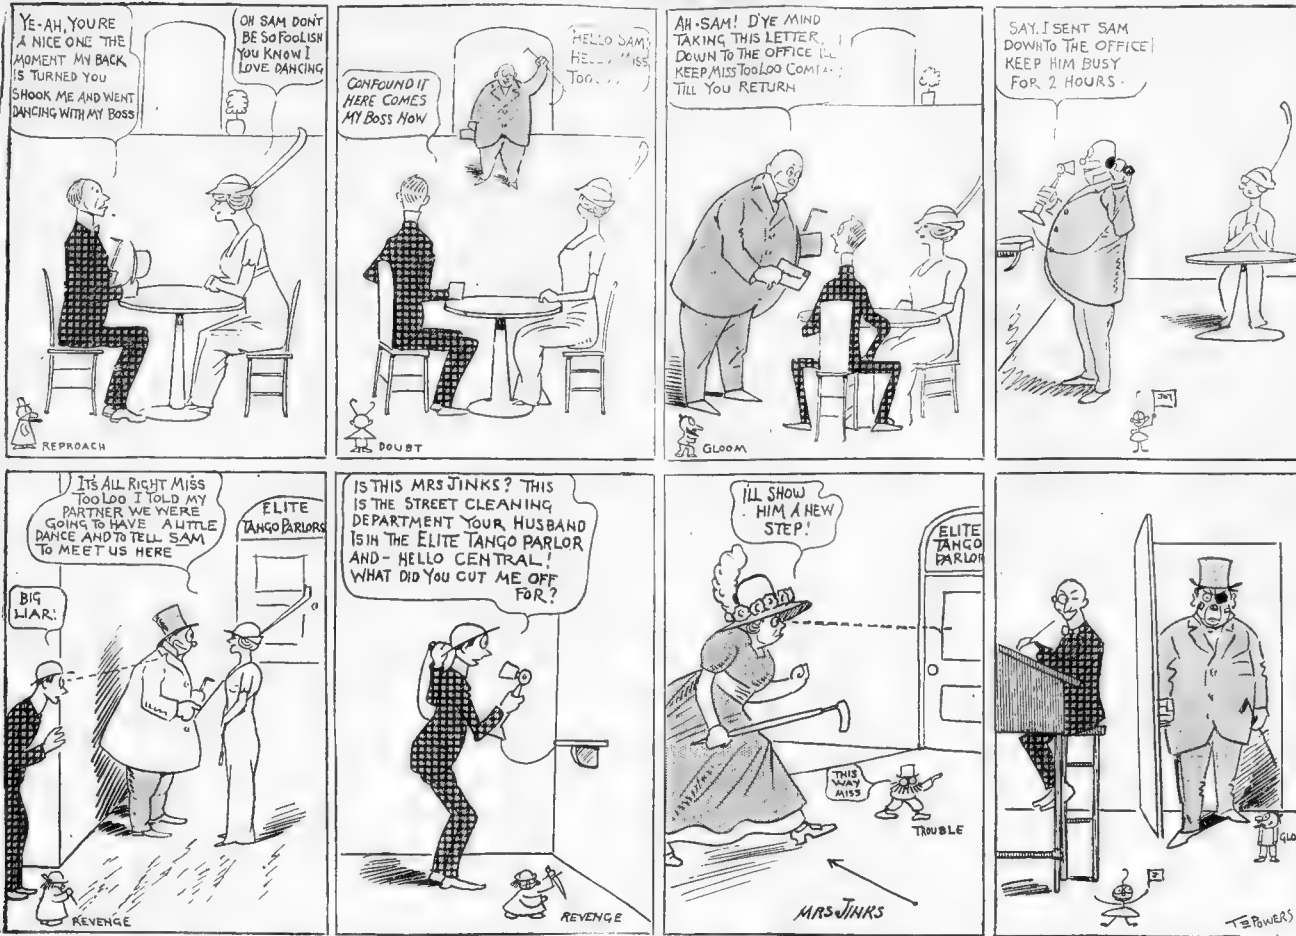

Suddenly the room commenced to smell noisily of onions. Of course, it was a close room, but we hadn't noticed it so much on friend Kingsley before we entered. Had he over-indulged in the hors d'oeuvres at a wop tabbldote?

Presently he said, "Do you smell the onions?"

Best Jokes from Here and There

Cause and Effect.
THE tailor's sign in a little infant town was an apple—slightly an apple. The people were amazed at it. They came in crowds to the tailor, asking him what an apple meant in the sign was.
The tailor, with a complacent smile, replied:
"If it hadn't been for an apple where would the clothing business be today?"

What Was He Thinking Of?
SUTHER—Uncle Silas, do you like bananas?
Uncle Silas (hard of hearing)—No, indeed. I prefer the old-fashioned nag-togawa.

STOUT LADY—That seems to me to be a very small piece of meat for the lun.
Attendant—It may seem a small piece to you, mum, but it's heaps for the lion.

Why.
"AND you wouldn't begin a journey on Friday?"
"Not I."
"I can't understand how you can have faith in such a silly superstition."
"No superstition about it. Saturday's my pay day."

Proof.
TOMMY arrived home one day with a nice new golf ball.
"Look at the lost ball I found on the links, pa," he said.
"But are you sure, Tommy," asked his father, "that it was a lost ball?"
"Oh, yes," said the boy. "I saw the man and his caddy looking for it."

It Depends.
"WHAT does Algrenon call his motor boat?"
"Depends on how the engine is working."

Then They Suffer.
LADY—I am collecting for the suffering poor Man—But you are sure they really suffer?
Lady—Oh, yes, indeed. I go to their houses and talk to them for hours at a time.

The Unkindest Cut.
MRS. Cronan heard her little granddaughter Margaret crying as if in great pain, and happened to the child.
"Why, dear, what is the matter?" inquired Mrs. Cronan. "Did you meet with an accident?"
"No, grandma!" sobbed Margaret. "It wasn't an accident! M-mother did it on purpose!"

Baffled at Last

OR SELDUM SEEZIT'S HOPELESS QUEST!!
The Most Thrilling Detective Story of the Year in Eight Palpitating Chapters.

FIVE anxious men stood up. As they did so they arose from their chairs. They were in the library of the home of Seldum Seesit, the world-famous detective.

These five men composed a committee representing 250,000 anxious citizens. These citizens had chipped in to pay the fees of the great detective.

CHAP. II.
"I accept your money," said our hero, biting the check to see if it was genuine.
"Will you find—" began one eager member of the committee.
"If there is such a thing I will find it," he promised. The committee members went to report. Seldum went to the refrigerator.

CHAP. III.
Disguised as an easy mark Seldum Seesit arrived at the Soakemo House.
"Do you take Summer boarders?" he inquired.
"We take everything," he was assured.

CHAP. IV.
Unshaven and in ragged clothes, the world-famous detective walked into the office of the Premier Inn.
"Wall Street men got taken at this house," he was informed.
"I have found one place where they do not take everything, at any rate," Seldum murmured as he swatted a few mosquitoes and went back to the station.

CHAP. V.
From the Overlook House to the Hill Top Hotel, from there to the Everett, from there to the Cedars (two of them in pots), and from there to the Hittorilestist, but something was the matter with all of them.

CHAP. VI.
At the end of seven days a week had elapsed.

CHAP. VII.
At the end of the second month our world-famous detective had visited and inspected 65 places.

CHAP. VIII.
At the end of three months the great detective returned to his city home.

For the first time in twelve weeks he smiled.
Calling his stenographer he dictated the following:
"Chairman Committee 250,000 Anxious Citizens:
Dear Sir—I have the honor to make the following report:
Tell your 250,000 anxious citizens to apply to St. Peter for a perfect Summer resort."
There's no such thing on earth.

X's truly

THE MORNING SMILE

Wex Jones, Editor

Vol. III. Boston, Sunday, August 2, 1914. No. 34.

Do You Want a Summer Job?

The Smile, in a Series by Experts, Will Tell You Just How to Get One.

Don't miss a word of this wonderful guide to opportunity!

DO you want a job for the Summer?

Of course you do. There are thousands of persons who work in Summer that would never think of doing a tap in Winter.

The great thing about a Summer job is naturally that it shall require the minimum of work. Any book can get a job that's all work; by studying these articles you will be able to get a position where work will not be unduly prominent.

A position that should prove a pleasure to any one of a humorous turn is that of hotel fly-swatter in a country place. Few people know of such positions, so those who read the Smile guide have obtained their money's worth in the first crack out of the box.

There is no joy quite equal to spotting a fly on the nose of a dining guest and knocking it off with a baseball bat. The started expression of the guest will repay you whether you get the fly or not.

Another good Summer position is lying on your back under a shady tree.

Lieguard at a seaside place is a splendid job for any one who cannot swim, and therefore runs no risk of pushing out and getting drowned. The work in this job is about as close to zero as one can find.

Another job, admirable in every respect, except that it entails early rising, is holding ice to the thermometer on a Summer hotel porch. The guests come out and see the temperature is 65, while they read in the morning papers that New York is sweltering at 95 degrees. Although they are not in extremely hot and uncomfortable, it cheers them up to a remarkable extent when they dope it out that they have 20 degrees the better of New York.

Only athletic-looking young men weighing more than 200 pounds are qualified for the position of the man who came to Flitop after the doctors had given him but two weeks to live. Of course, he weighed but 91 pounds when he reached the salubrious heights of Flitop and now look at him. This is a soft snap, and the hotel has to put up good grub.

SAFETY FIRST.

TO THE EDITOR—In the Summer many persons are killed by lightning, therefore I thought I would give a tip that may prevent such accidents in future. During a thunderstorm, do not remain in one spot. Keep moving about. As lightning obviously can only strike you in one spot, you will be as safe as you can be.

Nothing in Particular.

Probably a hen is jealous of a canary.

Safe bet, though, that a canary isn't jealous of a hen. And so it goes in the sad world of humans.

We respect a silent parrot. It can talk, but won't. A lesson is many.

Having invited the Swiss Navy to join in the celebration of the Panama Canal's opening, the State Department ah! did request Liberts to send us a white hope.

Somewhere or other lives a spider that eats birds. Well, why shouldn't it, it's big enough. Anyway, that would be the human viewpoint.

A worm called the "army worm" has been living on the country in the Bronx. Same as human armies.

A bittern doesn't "quack"; it "booms." The bittern doesn't say any more than a duck, but it sounds more important.

The Militant Chorus

From the comic opera, "Votes for Women," now enjoying a record-breaking run in London, playing to overflowing houses—both Lords and Commons.

HO! we are the Harnum Squad!
The dreaded Fire Committee!
Hour'teas are gay, for we're hon the way
To burn up the blasted city.
We're harmed in the teeth with matches—
We'll never be left in the lurch
For a light, you see, in case that we Run harnum some combustible church.

We had a song! We had a coming!
The Dynamic Lady!
"Votes for Women!" we carol—
With a bomb in her hand.
Ho! we come for to vote!
The King had the Queen;
We've brought them a hoffer—
An hinfimal machine.

Ho! we har the Suffrage Committee of Har!
With a 'atchet or meat haw watch has our part!
We love masterpieces, so rare hard to do a,
For the noise of their ripping is sweeter to our,
So we sneaks by the guards him the Big 32men.
Then we have ripping times with hart fire-works like these.

Buttered toast hand tea don't tempt us
Nor roast beef done tender hand rare,
Pudding hand cheese—lit water bagrets
With has, for farts we don't care,
For a week we've not at any witnuls.
But, you, with the tray, c'n just 'ike 'em
For we're feelin' too good to be tempted with food—
We're tank 'em a hunder strike.

Ho! the 'unger strikel the 'unger strike
We scorn the strikes they thinks we'll like
We've grown pale hand thin from nothin' white,
But we're 'appy as birds—'way!
Ho! the bill of fare! the bill of fare!
Hev'ing thing nice for to heat was there,
But we've the pie in the pie in the jokers 'ays,
And should about, "Take it away!"

Scott Also Stars with the Bat—
Little Shortstop Smashes Out Home Run in Eighth—Collins Pitches Boston to Victory

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The Red Sox beat the White Sox 4 to 3 today and made it four straight.
Jacquie Fournier, the White Sox first baseman, Janvrin, Hobbs, and Scott starred for the crew of Carri and turned what seemed a certain defeat into a brilliant victory. And Fournier was the most effective of all.

It was his miff of a thrown ball in the seventh, a ball that would have retired the side, that gave the Red Sox the opportunity to break through the brilliant pitching of J. Fournier. This error would have helped them to win the game. Fournier was hit by a line drive and was out. The Red Sox then scored two runs in the eighth and won the game.

The Bennetts of Somerville defeated the Somerville Athletics on the City Field, Somerville, in the City League series, yesterday afternoon by a score of 5 to 3. The features of the game was a catch by O'Leary of the Bennetts. In the sixth inning he rubbed Pike of a sure hit by running about one thousand women were present at the Dromedary Wells and Colls Bell match, and nearly two thousand at the Webb-Clark and Smith Carpenter matches—all of which took place recently at Olympia, London. The mere statement of numbers, gives little idea as to the class of women to whom boxing matches appeal, but this drawing by Artlett H. E. Webster of the Illustrated London News, just received in Boston, picturing some of the fair sex who were present at Olympia, is significant. Many American society women were in the crowd, and they threaten to "take up" the sport on this side of the Atlantic. At the sides are actual photographs of what they saw in London—left, above, Smith down for a count of nine in the fourth round; left, below, Smith clumsily missing a furious right punch, which Carpenter is avoiding.

FOR THE YEAR 1991

The first of a series of interstate races at Washburn, taking place on the 1st of March, will be the 1st of the season. The return race will be at Moorhead Park on the 1st of April.

Making Small Display
Advertisements Pay

What Was Told in Ten Minutes to the Writer of This Talk

I WENT into a small store the other day and talked to the proprietor about small display advertising. I wasn't soliciting his business, I was just wanting to hear what he had to say—what explanation he had to make for not advertising.

He had a very fine store in a splendid location. The appointments and the fixtures were magnificent. The merchandise was the best, and, so far as I can judge, admirably chosen.

It was eleven o'clock in the forenoon of a beautiful day. There were five clerks behind the counters. One of them was busy with a customer who was buying a liberal bill of goods. The others were putting around the stock—trying to give the appearance of being busy.

The rent was no less than ten thousand dollars a year. There were visible fixed charges that must have amounted to a considerable sum. Actual money was being lost every idle minute.

And yet this merchant was apparently contented.

I began questioning.

"Why don't you advertise—in a small way—in one good newspaper every day?"

"I believe in advertising. I advertise once or twice a year—at the end of the seasons. Then I have something sensational to offer."

"Does that advertising pay for itself?"

"I should say so. Can't you see the customers in my store. But I have a pretty good reputation in the neighborhood. I announce a sale the people know they will get something worth something for."

"Wouldn't that be true if you advertised regularly?"

"I do a pretty fair business without advertising. No what?"

"You stand well with the neighborhood. You make good profits. You are in a fine position to make continuous advertising pay you—and pay you well. You can advertise and extend your business. You can make it pay for itself, and then pay you. As long as you are here for the accommodation of a few customers who may drop in during the day, it is expensive, but it is expensive. Why not take up that waste and invest it in advertising?"

"I haven't anything to advertise—nothing special. I have spent a great many years establishing this business and the people know who I am and what I am. And when they want anything in my line they come for it."

"But—you're not the only one in this line of business with good merchandise and a fair reputation. Surely the others do business, too?"

"Yes, certainly. But I have my trade and I am satisfied."

This is a very fine business shop was said to me. For one had every probability of the greater possibilities of a business—had ever shown how to efficiently convert a "bad" motion of his business into a "good" producing sales.

He spent twenty years building a business—that advertising would have built in five years.

He never advertises except at the end of seasons.

He advertises then because the lack of constant demand during the year causes an accumulation of unsold goods. And when the season is over and his merchandise is out of style he disposes of it at a loss to "clean up" for the new fashion period.

He believes that he must give sensational bargains if he advertises, or that he cannot advertise unless he has something "special."

He knows his business—with the very important exception that he doesn't know how to promote it.

If he had but stopped to analyze he would know that every dollar's worth of merchandise in his store is "special"—extra special because it is good enough to find a place on his counter. And he SHOULD know that there are many thousands of people in Boston who do not trade with him now, because they haven't been told of the standard of merchandise he sells or the kind of a store he operates.

By advertising he would "turn" his store around, and thus reduce the cost of his merchandise.

That's what would pay for his advertising—he would gain many new and permanent customers.

Those would buy merchandise that was not advertised through the store and in a more favorable familiarity with his store. If he had these new customers as well as his old customers, he would have a constantly increasing profitable business.

That's the right way for this merchant to advertise.

Through the columns of the American. And this is true because no other newspaper in Boston offers so much responsive circulation.

Small advertisers in the American eventually grow into big advertisers, because the American reaches the greatest purchasing power, placed on circulation in Boston. It comes into the hands of advertising readers, advertising readers.

That their patronage is preferred by big advertisers is evidenced by the fact that the American carries the advertising of Boston's most progressive merchants.

You can make no mistake in following the successful.

"So striking and peculiar was the diadem of this Queen of ancient Egypt of 3000 years ago that as soon as Parisian fashion leaders saw it they made it the model for a new head ornament."

PERHAPS the most romantic discovery ever recorded in the field of archaeology is that just announced by Professor W. M. Flinders Petrie, the noted British Egyptologist.

He has just found near Lahun, in the forgotten tomb of the Queen of Pharaoh Seneferu II, with all the jewels and toilet articles of a lady of highest rank, left untouched after 3000 years, when all the surrounding tombs had been rifled ages ago.

The greatest treasure of all contained in the tomb of Queen Ahmose was the golden crown, or diadem, she wore. The effect of its eight gold streamers, six hanging down and two standing up like congealed ribbons, is very striking. So noticeable was its effect that as soon as a picture of Professor Petrie's find was received in Paris the ancient diadem was immediately made a model for a new head ornament by the fashion leaders of the French capital.

The crown is thus described by Professor Petrie:

"It is a broad band of brilliantly burnished gold, with fifteen beautifully talad rosettes of gold around it, and in front of it the royal coils of gold inside, the head of lotus. This band it was missing when the crown first appeared. Some days afterward, in washing the earth from the recess, the head was found. . . . The back of it stood up double plumes of gold rising into a golden flower. At the sides and back hung down broad ties of gold. The whole crown is too large for a modern head, being made to go over the very full Egyptian wig. It is altogether over eighteen inches high."

The finding of the tomb was a most thrilling occurrence. It was part of a pyramid built by Pharaoh Seneferu for himself and his family Ages ago, probably within fifty or a hundred years of Pharaoh's death, the tombs had been ransacked. Five empty tombs stood along the south side of the pyramid without a single bone left in place.

In the tomb of the great Pharaoh the wide pit descended by steps in the rock to a depth of about twenty-eight feet, and at the end stood a granite sarcophagus, the lid perched back as far as it could go and then bruised and broken away, so that a boy could have crawled in and rifled the contents. Not a chip of the mummy or its wrappings was left behind. Days of work had been spent in ransacking the grave.

Yet all the time close by the plunderer's side was a recess in the tomb which they disregarded. It was the burial place of the beloved wife of the great Pharaoh. The second tomb was so close to the first that a man might have put one hand on Pharaoh's sarcophagus and the other on the Queen's, but it passed unnoticed and undisturbed.

The Queen possessed a wonderful collection of jewelry and toilet articles, both dainty and magnificent. A great necklace of long drop beads is very remarkable. The pendants are of gold, carnelian, lazuli and amazon stone. From the middle hangs the most splendid scarab ever found, cut in perfect sharpness in the richest lapid lazuli.

Among the toilet articles was a superb silver mirror, with a handle of obsidian and a gold head of the goddess Hathor. A pair of copper razors with golden handles was a curious feat ure. Apparently the ancient Queen used them to trim her eyebrows and remove superfluous hair. There were three jars of ointment, with gold mounting round the base, the brass and the lids. Evidently they were used for ointments and perhaps rouge, with which Ahmose had herself attractive to Pharaoh 3000 years ago.

From these remains the Queen's complete boudoir could be reconstructed.

On the other hand, we all know of people who are of local social standard, but whom are correct; these are the people who law would not take us to court for "insanity" or "idiotism" or "moral imbecility" or "moral insanity" (as I have tried to show) desirable to remove from the community.

WHAT is known as the Milky Way, the peculiar girdle of stars which completely encircles the heavens, has from time immemorial been ~~known~~ merely because of its resemblance to a milky streak.

The combined light of the myriads of tiny and distant stars which go to make up this cluster comes to us in so subdued a form that instead of shining brightly like that of other stars it sheds but a milky glow on the heavens, which is visible to the naked eye only on the clearest nights.

It has now been suggested, however, that the Milky Way is entitled to that designation for a much better reason than is afforded by its appearance. It is pointed out that, in all probability, the heavenly region occupied by the Milky Way is the birthplace of all stars, and that they mature there in their infancy. When they are old enough and large enough to be weaned, so to speak, they leave the region of the Milky Way and become visible to us as individual new stars.

Just how many millions of years it may take before the immature worlds comparing the Milky Way grow big enough to branch out for themselves is more or less problematical, but, of course, in considering the birth of new stars one must bear in mind that millions of years are usually required for such phenomena.

It is believed that the younger stars have not had sufficient time to stray far from the plane of the Milky Way. As they grow older, however, they increase in velocity, and soon they leave the Milky Way altogether and assume an individuality of their own. As they come within closer proximity to the earth their presence becomes more comes down to our astronomers. Not more than a dozen new stars have been identified by astronomers within the past three hundred years, but it is quite probable, of course, that many more have escaped observation.

That the velocity of stars grows with distance is explained by the fact that the pull of attraction which stars have on each other grows, and this mutual attraction accounts for the increased velocity.

The theory is an interesting one and has claimed the attention of a number of well known astronomers here and abroad.

By Professor Ford W. Eaton

One great difficulty in all astronomical observations is the dusty air which lies close to the earth's surface. A few of the important observatories are therefore located at high elevations, as on mountain tops.

Some mountains do not exist everywhere, so that an observatory is "central" in China, where there are no mountains, the next best thing is to go to the air, as in a balloon, to get above the dust and the unsteady air near the surface.

And a balloon position is superior to a hospital top of the same height, in that there are not so many

At least it will prepare to do so that occurs when they take up the According to many astrologers, the greatest danger to the future of the earth. The periods of maximum cold are identical with seasons of coldness on earth. We are now a sun spots, and the long cold, we find in fully in agreement with That is a point on which Heli of the sun, and a general prediction to a volcanic hole in the ice as some monstrous dragon in the sun. The sun spots reach once once to eleven years.

The corona is the most brilliant part of the sun's atmosphere, extending to a distance of 100,000 miles. It is totally incandescent, because the sun permits the faint light of the sun which is a part of the sun is visible.

The corona consists of streams of rays, some of which come away from the sun, while others are reflected back.

These sun streams of matter ejected or thrown off from the sun's surface, and with such velocity that it never returns.

The Effect of the Sun's

The cause of these strange coronas is one of the things they are trying to find out.

Several theories have been advanced, but the one which is particularly interesting and which the facts as we know them support is that the sun's corona is composed of streams of particles of matter or streams of plasma of planets and comets, about the sun in elliptical orbits, planets themselves, and, in fact, all sorts of celestial bodies in and about the solar system, and cause showers of "shooting stars" or meteors in the earth's atmosphere.

For visual observation of the solar corona, the observer must be very thickly near the surface, there occurs the slightest disturbance in the balance of the solar system would fall into the sun.

How does these mirrors which enclose orbits then are others, a come from a dead space and find.

This helps to keep up the solar is the cause of some of the potentially raising in the sun's photosphere with the earth's atomic metals and other elements so have turned in gas!

The Things I Rat Found in Any Rat

How to Avoid SHARING YOUR HOME WITH RATS

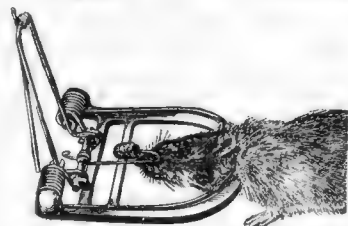

THE recent threatened outbreak of bubonic plague in New Orleans emphasizes again the importance of exterminating the rats which science now knows to be the means of spreading the germs of this dread disease.

Dr. French Simpson, of the United States Public Health Service, gives some timely advice as to how any building can be made absolutely rat-proof. If his advice were generally followed every community would be free from the menace of rats and also of the rat-borne insects which make their home in the rat's body.

Since rats are able to live between ceilings, in walls or roofs, can pass through from roof to roof by telephone and electric wires, and in other uncalculated ways, it is obvious that any plan for effective rat-proofing must take in every inch and corner of the building, from the cellar and basement to the roof, and the closets and every crevice.

In rat-proofing a new building, if it is a frame structure it should be placed on a foundation wall not less than six feet thick, of brick or concrete, or such material as will be impervious to rats. This wall must be built at least six inches above the ground level, and the entire building not less than 18 inches beneath the surface of the surrounding soil (the bottom of the walls and floor beneath the building), and the wall must be covered with the inner surface of the floor above, and joints must be imbedded in this wall, or the spaces between the joists must be filled in and closed up to the full level. Openings in the wall must be plugged with cement or putty, and openings in the wall should be screened with wire cloth not less than 20 gauge nor greater than one-half inch into wall openings for laundry doors three doors must fit exactly when closed, and should, if possible, be provided with spring for automatic closing.

The ground area enclosed by foundation walls is a most important consideration. If no foods are to be prepared, stored or sold on the premises, this area must be covered with a layer of concrete at least three inches thick, and above this a floor of tongue-and-groove boards, or of floor, disregarding the dead space remaining between.

But if foodstuffs are to be prepared in the house, for commercial or other purposes, the ground area must be filled in with earth or sand to within 3 inches of the top of the foundation wall over which is placed a layer of concrete at least three or four inches thick, and upon this must next be laid cement at least one-half inch thick.

Ground areas must be constructed, because rats escape through accidental openings subsequently made in the flooring will burrow and harbor in the ground beneath.

Whenever possible and not prohibited by fire ordinance, basement ceilings should remain open and unsealed, so that rat refuse between them and the floor above may be prevented. If a finished ceiling is required, it should be made of wire mesh, and the floor above must be sealed.

If expense prevents the installation of such rat-proof foundation as described, rat-proofing of frame structures (if not concrete buildings) may be accomplished by elevation, on free underpinning, not less than 18 inches above the surface of the surrounding soil; the ground area must then remain clear of lumber and debris, and clean all the time, last a convenient, congenial and perfect rat harbor be provided.

Close-fitting cover.

Roof doors and hatches must fit snugly and remain closed when not in use. Ventilators, skylights and and pipes for conveying water, gas or steam, should be sealed with cement or putty, and the seal should be made so that it will not be disturbed by the weight of the pipe or the weight of the water, gas or steam.

This area will be of brick or concrete, not less than 18 inches thick, extending not less than 18 inches beneath the surface of the surrounding soil, and upward until flush with the under surface of the floor above.

Should the building rest on a brick or concrete foundation an additional wall will not be required; but care should be taken to see that the foundation wall extends fully around the building, and never lacking in this respect or otherwise, the building should be repaired.

If floor joists rest on the top of this wall it should be continued upward between such joists until flush with the under surface of the floor above.

The ground area of basement walls of brick structures and upper floors and roofs must be treated as for new buildings, being especially careful that the additional rat-proofing requirements are complied with when such buildings contain cellars.

Many rats can usually be exterminated from the front steps; remember this when remodeling.

Rat food is just waste food or food that is thrown away carelessly in vacant lots or around garbage cans, or into such cans that are imperfect, or surplus food intended for stock or droppings, or other refuse, or handling. The imperfect garbage can provides the most important rat food supply in the community, which cannot get away from the rat until the imperfect garbage can is replaced.

Rats can be by the means here described, kept out of people's houses. But if a rat does get into a house, which being driven out of rat-proof houses will all the more populate the rat-proof house, a perfect garbage can system must be installed. This is a civic necessity.

Every house should be either a free source of rat food, such yards should be either rat-proof or abandoned. You can rat-proof a coop or chicken or other by means of wire mesh, or by means of concrete structures.

Every building should be covered with wire mesh, or concrete, or other material, not less than 20 gauge nor greater than one-half inch mesh, to extend upward at least six feet. Chickens may range in the open yard, but must be fed only within the rat-proofed area.

How WALL PAPER AFFECTS YOUR CHARACTER

"SHOW me where you live," says the psychologist, "and I will tell you what kind of man or woman you are." According to a very recent study, the pictures, books and other things which surround ourselves not only reflect our characters, but have a strong influence in shaping them for good or bad.

A few years ago the idea that such a trivial thing as the color of the paper on our walls could have any appreciable influence on a person's health and character would have been thought absurd. Now, however, physiologists and psychologists are agreed that the choice of wall paper is a matter of great importance, more thought than most of us give it.

This is particularly true of rooms occupied by children. The glare of white walls, formerly thought ideal for nurseries and play rooms, is now declared by oculists to be positively ruinous to the eyes of babies and young children. Red is another color to be used cautiously in children's rooms. Some psychologists go to the length of declaring that deep-red wall papers, especially when accented at night by red-shaded lights, can have a real part in making the morals of growing boys and girls.

Different color schemes are required for boys and girls. The dainty pinks and blues, which enter so charmingly into the plan for a girl's bedroom are unsuitable for the vigorous, athletic, healthy inclined boy, whose mind unconsciously demands much more solid and brilliant colorings.

It is an experiment of boys of eleven in a wealthy home was given a dainty gilt-and-white room. His sister, just a year older, was put into a large, ornate, finished bedroom, where she survived only dainty-toned furniture, heavy damask curtains and wall paper of a deep red tone.

In one month, every possible bit of white and gold in the boy's room was covered with pine-branches; the "pretty girl" pictures were sacked in the closet, boxing gloves, gauntlets, dumb bells, and Indian blankets tossed over bed and chairs, took as much of the dainty atmosphere away as possible. While in the girl's room light-colored posters, photos, trailing vines, and even a gold chair, snarled from her brother's room, while he was out gathering cedar branches, showed her feminine life, seemed so much primness and unadorned richness.

How to WIND AN EIGHT-DAY CLOCK

THOUSANDS of excellent time pieces are damaged by being wound too tightly or permitted to run until they are almost run down.

The mechanism of a watch or clock will wear longer and render more valuable service if not placed under a strain.

The best time piece is one which is wound to the utmost, and then runs for eight days without being wound again.

The most satisfactory way to wind an eight-day clock is to wind it twice in that many days, and to wind it only half or a little more than half in the other half of the time.

The mechanism of a watch or clock will wear longer and render more valuable service if not placed under a strain.

The best time piece is one which is wound to the utmost, and then runs for eight days without being wound again.

run the time limit and then wound up to the utmost, and then runs for eight days without being wound again.

A watch that is wound twice in that many days will give more perfect satisfaction in time than if the watch is wound up tight once every twenty-four hours, as most persons do.

Do not permit the watch to run down, and only wind it a part of the amount needed to wind it completely.

SUNDAY AMERICAN EXAMINER PATTERNS

No. 1023.
A Pretty Frock.
Dress for Girls and Misses.
The design has many new style features. The tunic and skirt are in one piece, making for simplicity and ease of wear. The skirt is full and flared, with a wide hem. LADY DUFF GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creatress of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for the magazine presenting all that is newest and best in style for well-dressed women.

Lucile of London's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff Gordon's American establishment is at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York.

But I must give you a few details of a lovely mid-Summer gown I have just created. It is one of the quaintest of "young girl" costumes, and I know that it will be liked in the United States. This I have called my Silver and Rose Gown.

chiffon is draped an overskirt of rose matisse. The drapery is very much bunched at the back. Across the front is drawn a tight apron tunic of rose net, elaborately embroidered with silver sequins. The bodice is almost entirely of the rose net. The ruffled arm holes are distinctively new.

Furs are being worn even on the mild days, and seldom are they out of place, and the mid-Summer evening show the loveliest of fur collars and cuffs. The wrap which I am sending this week has the new wide sleeve and the crossed waist line, which will distinguish the Autumn wraps.

It is indeed a pleasure to create so delightful a costume as this Pompadour gown. The fabric is so lustrous that using it is a perfect joy. Combined with this sea-green silk is a fine hand-made lace, which is as misty and cobwebby as a veritable Scotch mist. The bodice with its over-bertha is matronly, rather than girlish, in its effect.

SARGOI SHOULD DO THE SAME FOR YOU

Here at last is a true hair grower given for a trial on a positive guarantee of success and satisfaction or no pay. Crystals is guaranteed to grow hair back on balding spots, to stop hair from falling out, to drive out dandruff, to make thin, short, scant hair grow thick and long; to make oily, matted hair soft and pliant; to make falling hair soft, glossy, fluffy and beautiful. It must do this or it is free.

And hundreds of thousands of people are using it. Women—living in every America say it has done three things for them, and they give Crystals all the praise.

It has secured the sole American right to this great English Hair Treatment, which has been awarded Gold Medals at the World's Fairs.

It is the only hair preparation in the world to have been awarded the

Go To California Next Year

Copyright, 1914, by The Hearst Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

The PEOPLE of California and all the West Coast of our country will welcome the whole world next year at the Panama Exposition.

Most earnestly we advise every reader who can possibly afford it to plan NOW to attend that wonderful demonstration of man's power, and that wonderful exhibition of the achievements of the whole world.

To miss the opportunity that California offers to the world is to miss indeed the opportunity of a lifetime, the opportunity for a national education that every man in this nation should desire.

The picture on this page, man, the giant greater in his united force than any giant of fable, has pushed aside the walls of earth, opened the continent, united the oceans, and the great Exposition which the world will see celebrates that event.

But for Americans, interested in their country and their countrymen, proud of the courage that built up the West, the Panama Exposition celebrates even more strikingly and nobly THE WONDERFUL RECOVERY OF SAN FRANCISCO FROM THE DREADFUL EARTHQUAKE AND FIRE SO RECENT.

Man is not only more powerful than the earthquake, cutting a continent in two, he is more powerful than earthquake and fire combined. And San Francisco has proved that.

Only eight years ago the beautiful city of San Francisco was a mass of blackened ruins through which passed crowds of sorrowful, but NOT DISCOURAGED, men and women.

To-day San Francisco is greater than ever, more beautiful, more prosperous than ever. In a few short years, men with their courage have done all that had been done in the years before and more.

And all the people of the United States join in proudly inviting the nations of the world to see in San Francisco what one city of Americans can do, how one group of men can triumph over nature and misfortune.

You ought to go to San Francisco next year, if only to see how irresistible is the power of men, when they refuse to be frightened or heartbroken, when they say pluckily, "What was done in a generation we shall do in a year."

There will be wonderful exhibitions at the great Panama Fair.

You will see there the marvels of every trade, every science. Every effort of man, from the farmer on the broad prairie to the astronomer on the hilltop and the miner far below the ground, will form part of the education that the Panama Exposition will offer to the world.

But greatest of all in educational value is the lesson in courage, recuperation, fearlessness and quick accomplishment that the citizens of San Francisco will put before the different nations.

Sight-seers from old Europe will stand in amazement saying, "We have crossed a wonderful nation that was built up in a century, to visit an extraordinary city CREATED BY MAN'S COURAGE OVER NIGHT."

Plan now, THIS VERY DAY, for the trip that you should make to that great Exposition next year.

While you live, you will never again have as good a reason for crossing this continent of which you are part owner.

AND NO AMERICAN SHOULD DIE, IF HE CAN HELP IT, WITHOUT SEEING THIS CONTINENT THAT HE HAS HELPED TO BUILD.

You may go one way by rail, over the great mountains, through the wonderful cities, across the prairies, where only a little while ago men travelled painfully, fighting each step.

You may return by water through the Panama Canal, and see the greatest of all the works with which up to this date man has demonstrated his control over nature, his proprietorship and mastery of this planet.

Extraordinary and not to be seen again in this lifetime is the opportunity that San Francisco and the Panama Fair offer to you.

You will see the greatest miracle in city building that the world has ever witnessed.

You will see the greatest Exposition that man has produced.

Going one way you will study this wonderful continent, this AMERICA of which you are so proud.

And on the other trip you will see the oceans uniting as you go through the Panama Canal.

YOU AND THE CHILDREN THAT YOU TAKE WITH YOU WILL COME BACK BETTER, MORE THOROUGHLY EDUCATED HUMAN BEINGS, MORE INTELLIGENT AMERICANS.

We cannot imagine that which we have not seen. We can be no greater than our experience of life, our conception of this country cannot be in reality greater than our actual KNOWLEDGE of the country.

California invites you next year to know this continent, to realize its greatness and power, to make yourself AN AMERICAN CITIZEN in the true sense of the word, by knowing that America in which you are a citizen, by realizing what a wonderful, gigantic part of the Globe it is, lying between the Atlantic and the Pacific, ruled by our laws, dependent on the intelligence of our citizenship.

MAKE TO-DAY YOUR PLAN TO VISIT CALIFORNIA NEXT YEAR.

Arrange NOW the month and the exact day in the month when you will make the trip.

It will not be expensive. The people of San Francisco and of all the West Coast, filled with ambition and national pride, will do everything possible to encourage visitors and receive them hospitably.

The railroad lines and the steamship lines will make especially low rates for the round trip—opportunities unequalled for seeing this continent and the Canal will be offered.

If you write for information addressing your letter, "Publicity Agent, Panama Exposition, San Francisco, California," you will have sent to you most gladly all information about travel, hotels and everything else.

Some time in your life you intend TO SEE THIS COUNTRY. Next year is the time; do not let the opportunity go by.

You can see all the wonders of our land, going and coming.

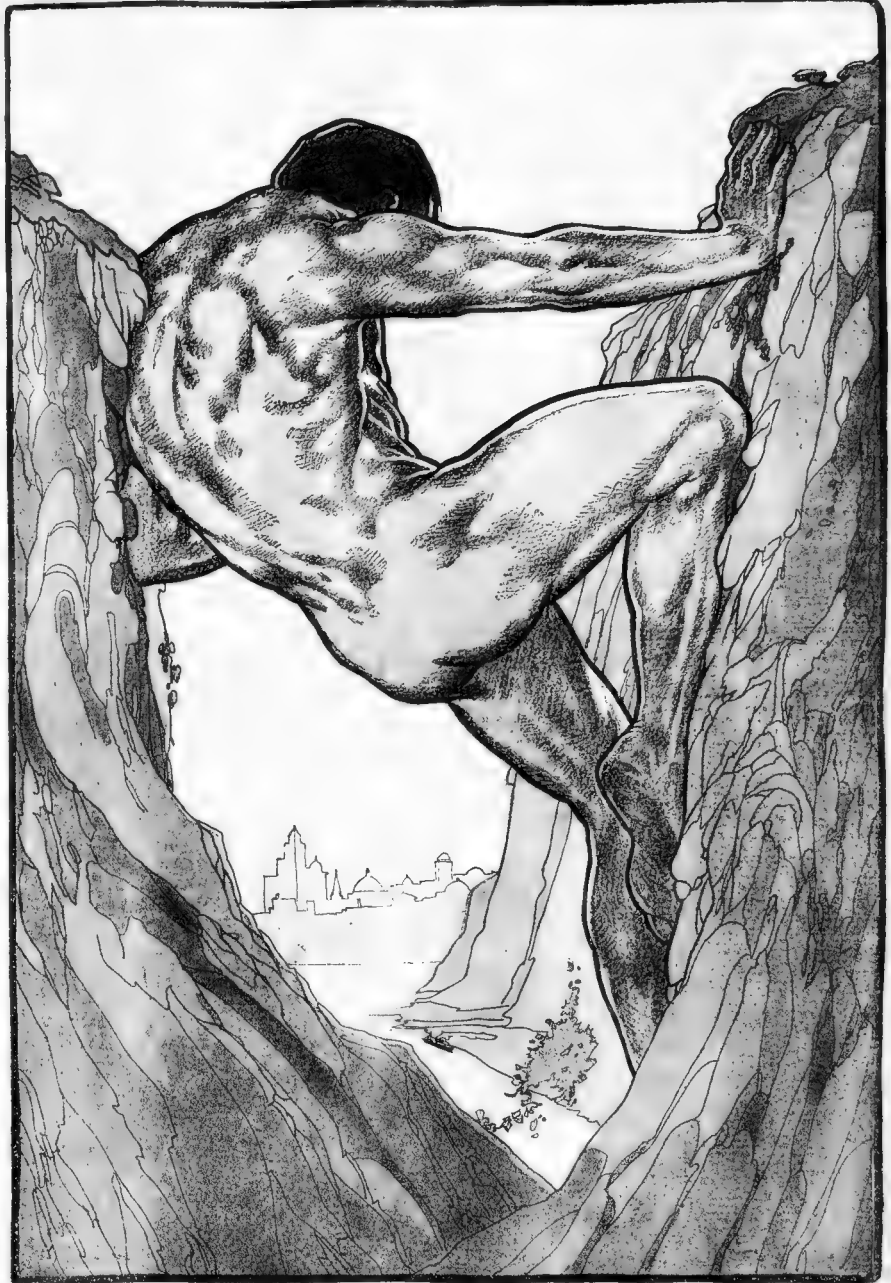

On the way West you may see Niagara Falls, the Great Lakes, the wonderful cities of the lakes, the prairies, the Rocky Mountains, Yellowstone Park, the Grand Canyon, if you choose.

Coming back you will see the marvelous Panama Canal, part of it eighty-five feet above the sea, fifty miles in length from deep water in the Caribbean to deep water in the Pacific.

You will see the giant State of Texas, greatest of them all, able to house and to feed well a hundred and thirty millions of human beings—without being more crowded than England is to-day.

See your country. know it, make your self a real part of it.

Cross and re-cross the great continent

The Giant, Man, More Powerful Than the Earthquake, Has Split This Continent. At Panama the Atlantic and Pacific Are United. The Human Race and This American Nation Especially Have Scored a Great Victory Over Nature.

Next Year in California All the Nations of the World Will Celebrate the Achievement of All Humanity in a Great Exposition.

AND MOST EARNESTLY WE URGE EVERY READER OF THIS NEWSPAPER TO NOW MAKE HIS PLANS FOR ATTENDING THAT EXPOSITION.

This editorial is published in all of the Hearst newspapers, New York, Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, San Francisco and Los Angeles, to-day.

THE PERLS OF PAULINE

Presented by the Hearst Sunday Newspapers in Collaboration with the Famous Pathe Players in a Photo-Play Serial Novel

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALLMENTS.

Sanford Marvin, a wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has worn himself out by overwork. His son, Harry, and his adopted daughter, Pauline, love each other, but she wants two years of thrilling experiences before she will marry him. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr. Marvin says to see what she has written. While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her story Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy which has just arrived from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his "nearly private secretary," helps lift off the mummy, but leaves the old man to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Mr. Marvin, during a fainting spell, sees the half-dead mummy come to life. Step out of her case, take a bouquet from her wrist and try to force it into his nerveless grasp while her lips whisper a strange message from the mummy's past. Restored to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it to be a dream until later he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's shawl. He promises Pauline one year to see life, and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription book a brief will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have permanent charge of Pauline's estate if something should happen to her before marriage. Hilda, a race track man, and Owen, determine to kill Pauline. The preceding chapters have dealt with the many efforts of the two to accomplish this.

PAULINE sat reading by the alcove library window. They had come late to the country this Summer and the park of Castle Marston had had time to have and bloom into utter splendor. It was like a flower kingdom in the Land of Fairy, and as her eyes were lifted listlessly now and then from the printed page, they roamed over the garden which lay in some vast and radiant Oriental rug in Nature's palace hall. The distant forest as the palace was, tapestried in green, was done, a sort of tender blue; its lamp, the moonlight sun, the Prince, her Harry, and the garden.

He always stands in the garden, and Pauline to herself. "The flowers speak a splendid toll for him." She shut her eyes in sheer ecstasy of grief. Not even the shabby man stopped his bit far forward as he came along the road, but the picture. As he turned to the gate and looked about with those dazed eyes he seemed only an in-voluntary contrast. She was a little surprised to see him, a moment later, talking in an easy way with Harry but there was no false pride in her low-browed face and she was sure his friends, until they proved themselves his enemies. All except Owen. She wondered why he so looked down on her.

The shabby man, holding his hat between nervous hands, was evidently an applicant for work. Harry pointed to the flower beds and the rose trees with a word of inquiry. The man assented vaguely. They came up the path together, making their way towards the servants' quarters near the garage. Harry passed at the closed window and spoke smilingly to Pauline.

"I have hired a new gardener, who does not know his own name," he said. The man shuffled his feet and looked sheepishly at the ground. Harry passed on to him and called the chauffeur, Farrell, who took the new man into the garage. Pauline turned back to the pages of the mummy. A picture in an article on the motor cars caught her eye and held it for some reason that she did not at first understand. It was a picture of a man in an officer's uniform, with a helmet tilted down his head and the keen features and daring eyes peculiar to those who live by peril. She had started to read the caption when she was interrupted by Denis bringing her letters. With a little futter of pleasure, she laid down the paper and, womanlike, began to read the letters from their postmarks before opening them. She bit upon one that brought a little peal of laughter from her, and she opened it eagerly and read:

"Walter and I want you and Harry to go with us at the wedding. Don't fail!" It was decided only yesterday, and it's going to be very quiet, with just the few people we can reach with informal notes like this. You can motor over in an hour. Tomorrow Mrs. Jones arrived last Thursday from Germany, and after the wedding the keeper will exhibit them. If Harry won't come to see us, married, he'll come to see the lions yours in a hurry."

"SOPHIE McCALLAN."

Pauline laughed again. It was like her unconventional cousin, Sophie, to arrange her wedding with the same starting haste that most of all the householders of the castle. The house she mentioned was typical of her original idea. She had suddenly announced to her parents one day that she was tired of domestic animals and was going to keep lions instead. And her amused and amazed father had not only been forced to yield, but to keep his eye out all over Europe, Asia and Africa for new bachelors in a velvet lion's ever since.

It was also typical of Sophie that she had selected from among all the dashing women at her heels, Walter Trumwell, simple and sedate, who was horrified by her pranks and shocked by her use of slang, but who adored her with the devotion of a frightened puppy. Their engagement had been long announced. It was only in the high-handed abruptness that the wedding was a surprise.

Pauline dropped the letter on the table and hurried from the room to look for Harry. He passed through the hall, Raymond Owen greeted her. She nodded brightly to him and hurried on. Her happy excitement drew his attention, and he followed her with his eyes as she ran out to the veranda. Harry had heard her first call and was coming in from the garage. He paused at the door of the library, where he had last seen her, and he narrowly avoided a collision with Owen, who was hurrying out. The look of covert guilt on the secretary's face caused his latest suspicion. But Owen, recovering himself, bowed, apologized and passed on.

Harry stepped into the library. He saw a open letter on the table, looked at the envelope and saw that he was inclosed by an address. He read the letter, and the old owl of trouble came into his eyes as he read to see if Owen were watching.

As he stepped into the hall he saw the chauffeur leaving the house. He stood in the doorway and watched Owen depart in his own machine, driven by his own chauffeur, a sudden young fellow whom the other employees held in aversion.

"He seems to be so something," muttered Harry to himself. "I wonder what he has to do with it." He thought that deeply on his mind as he moved down the steps and out to where the new gardener was working. The man had been greatly improved as to cleanliness and clothes, but there was still the strange distrast look in his eyes as he got up from a flower bed to speak to Harry. Pauline, after receiving the letter, was in search of her brother, had returned excited to her uncles letters and her magazine. As she lifted the letter from the table, the picture of the man in racing costume again struck her eye, and this time she read the caption:

"Ralph Palmer, whose skull was fractured in the Vanderbilt Cup Race and who disappeared from a hospital six weeks ago."

She studied the face again. It had a peculiar fascination for her. It seemed the living likeness of one whom she had seen dead. Suddenly her searching thoughts crystallized and she sprang up. She rushed again to the front door, carrying the magazine, open. She saw Harry and the gardener talking on the path. She ran down to them.

The gardener took off his hat, but Pauline looked at him with such piercing scrutiny that he hurried to resume his work. Harry, after a brief affectionate greeting, turned to give some last instructions, and behind him, Pauline stole another look at the magazine.

"I am sure it is," she said half aloud. Harry turned quickly. "What is, dear goddess of the garden?" she asked cheerily. "I have news," she exclaimed, remembering the wedding invitation. "Sophie McCALLAN is to be married to-night—just like that—without telling the last to the library."

"Did you tell Farrell to have the car ready?" "I will, dearest. But I am not sure that I can go."

She pointed in questioning protest. "But you MUST go."

"I got a telegram this morning, and I must go into town."

"To New York? Oh, Harry, I simply HATE your old business. Haven't we got enough money without trying to make all these trips in the world? Aren't we?"

"No, not to New York—just into Westbury, Miss Firebrand. I must use the wire direct to the office."

"Absurd. Why don't you telephone your message?" "Code messages, dear. They can't be talked."

"That you'll be back in time to go with me?" "I got a telegram this morning, and I must go into town."

"Her Farrell must get my car ready."

"He will. Farrell isn't going with me." Her threats and pretty promises followed him as he drove away. But Harry did not drive towards Westbury (farther than the first crossroads. Instead, he swerved out across country, to Windyville, the great McCALLAN estate. Only a vague parade moved his mind. He was forming dimly in his mind a plan to keep Pauline away from the McCALLAN wedding. Promotion whispered that even among the nuptial guests there might be danger. He had taken this road only a half hour ago, but he felt it was so. "Therefore he followed his blind trail with his blind thoughts."

From the crest of Windyville Hill, from which the road slopes down to beautiful Windyville through pines and firs, but from which the main road winds up to the house and garage can be seen in striking bridge view, Harry glimpsed his machine. He had seen nothing on his trip to ground his surmises and had begun to experience the self-satisfaction of one who has done a job of thing lazily.

To his far vision there was no unusual strast look in the McCALLAN house, in spite of the wedding day. Owen's car was not at the gate nor in the yard, and he certainly would not have sent it to the garage if he were making a business visit to the manager of the estate. Owen was not a friend of the family.

With a hateful sense of spring on the innocent and the sincere dread of being met there by any one—over by Owen—he was about to turn around, go back and across to take Pauline to the wedding, when the movement of a figure through the distant garage yard caused him to stiffen to attention and strain his eyes.

In an instant he had whipped his bluecoat from under the seat of the automobile and was starting through the establishment below.

It was but a few moments afterwards that he carefully replaced the glasses, turned his car around and drove away.

Mr. Owen had left the Marvin place in haste. He was seemingly intent upon a direct and important errand, but if any one who witnessed his departure in his car had both the haste and the errand would still have been unexplained.

They were in the loneliest stretch of woods a half-mile beyond the McCALLAN house when Owen leaned forward and said to his driver: "You may stop here."

"Yes," answered the young man with a respect that he showed to no one else. He drew the machine to the roadside and three asked: "Am I to go with you or stay here?"

"Stay here," answered Owen. "But don't sit there idling in the seat. We have broken down, you understand, and you will keep us broken down and keep us mending the machine until I return."

"All right, I get it," said the valuable servant with an unpleasant grin. "What do you get?" snapped Owen, stopping in the road.

"I mean I understand you, sir," said the youth with just a trace of sneering beyond his words.

Owen stepped back close to the driver, shaking a threatening finger under his yellow chin. "What you get from me is just your salary, do you understand? Your salary may be increased in certain emergencies but the minute you begin getting anything else, you quit. Do you get that?"

"Yes, I do, Mr. Owen. You've been mighty generous. I ain't cuttin' off my own arm to see what somebody else has got up his sleeve; am I?"

"Very well, then; go to work."

The youth sprang down and got out his tools. For two or three minutes while Owen's look form was still visible walking back along the road, he had come, he proceeded to work. Then he left the tools on the ground, where he could catch them up again at short notice, strode to the rear of the car, took a cigarette and stretched his self at his ease. Owen, who was not averse to physical labor, was at that moment sitting in the car, waiting for his dearest object to be at stake walked the half mile to Windyville rapidly and mentally at ease. Unlike Harry, who stood staring at the car, Owen's plans were definite and fixed.

He strode through the front gate but took his way indifferently to the stable in front of which two groans were curving a resplendent horse.

"Hello, Simon," said Owen to one of the groomers. "My car has broken down up the road here. I wonder if you can help out."

"I guess so," said the groomer, not very cheerfully. "We got plenty to do today as it is. Mr. Simon, with the wedding party on at them got blind drunk to look after."

"Who talks da lions?" cried a grim voice, and turning Owen to look at the man of the grey type, he stood on a box at the stable door smoking a cigarette and evidently regarding all the world as the object of his scorn.

"Why, who is that man?" asked Owen of the groom in a tone of condescending interest. "Where have I seen him before?" "If ye ever saw him before, ye wouldn't want to see him again," declared the groom. "He's Garcia, Miss Sopie's new lion tamer, but we ain't had time to name him yet. He's wild."

The answer to this taunt was a rush from Garcia, who, uttering an unfeeling roar that might have done credit to one of his lions, sprang towards the groom. The latter took quick refuge behind the horse.

This man's fury made Owen's eyes wide, too, but he looked on with an appreciative smile. As Garcia came back, groaning, to his seat on the box, the secretary stepped up to him and said to his hand.

"It is really you?" he said, the patronage in his voice offsetting the familiarity of his manner.

"If it looks like it, it is me," snarled the Gypsy. "Him—over there?" he cried, pointing to the groom, "he looks like his own face if I get him."

"Come, old friend," and Owen in a low voice. "Don't you remember me? Don't you remember the Zoological garden in Brussels and the lion that bent a cage so easily one day that it killed Herr Brunner, of Berlin?"

The last words were spoken almost in a whisper, but they had an electrical effect upon the lion tamer. He fairly writhed in his seat and covered away from Owen as from one who had laid out his lion.

It was at this moment that Harry, looking from the hill, saw his chauffeur and turned his car around.

"Come, let's see the lions, may I?" asked Owen, cheerily ignoring the man's terror-stricken expression.

"I want a word Garcia led the way into the stable."

The lion, six in number, were quarried in boxes and caged away from Owen as from one who had laid out his lion.

They had been quiet, but the sight of a stranger, and the sound of their roaring, startled them, and the building.

Garcia led Owen to the fattest cage and stopped abruptly.

"You after me?" he inquired, his nerve hardly recovered.

"Yes, but to help you, not to harm you, old friend."

"You lie, I thank you. You talk the police of the lion's accident in Brussels—no?"

First Authoritative Description by the Celebrated Assyriologist of the Ancient Babylonian Tablets That Take the Blame for Man's Fall Off Father Adam.

DR. STEPHEN LANGEON, an American scholar who holds the chair of Assyriology at the University of Oxford, has made a discovery that is believed to have a most radical bearing on the origin and authority of our Bible.

medicinal plants of antiquity, and hence may have arisen the notion of the cassia as a tree giving eternal life. This conception of the tree as the "tree of knowledge" is peculiar to the Hebrews.

In some Babylonian texts the cassia is called the tree of the serpent, and it is possible that the broken section which begins the tablet narrative may have contained the scene of the temptation.

Enil, whom Ninharas addresses in this important passage, is apparently her husband, Noah, with his name changed, because the handwriting is so different. The following is internal evidence to show that the "he" who ate the plant is Noah, the hero of the Flood, whose adventures are described at length on the other side of the tablet. Here then in this interesting investigation we have a device which it was Noah and not Adam who ate the forbidden fruit. I have written to Oxford to see Mr. Langdon, who went to the British Museum to see the tablet and the other interesting discoveries he has made. Mr. Langdon is American, born in 1874, and is only out of his teens. He is a brilliant translator and interpreter of the remarkable new Babylonian tablets in the Museum of the British Museum. He is a very young man, but American who can claim the distinction of being the first American to read the cuneiform. I am sure that you will be very glad to hear of the University of Oxford.

Mr Langdon is as modest as he is learned His name figures neither in the American nor English literature, yet by his profound scholarship he has become one of the few living men who are capable of translating the ancient Sumerian tongue, which was the language of the pre-Semitic inhabitants of Babylonia. This unique knowledge enabled him to decipher some of the tablets last year, which contained the oldest version of the translation of which he is pleased to assist.

One tablet alone tells of the reverse side of the astronomical observations of the flood, described as "the first or second period," and the beginning of the second period is given as the date of the fall of man from Eden. The reverse of the tablet contains specific details of the fall of man resulting from the possession of the old Bible story, which may be

"Common Sense" Child Reform Expert
(in an interview.)

THE REASON why children are brought to the Juvenile Court is that so far as their individual cases are concerned the influence of the home, the school and the church has been a failure. The Juvenile Court uses the most effective methods should be used to insure the return of the offender to society as a useful citizen. With boys and girls the Juvenile Court is a place where the child is brought to the corrective institutions where they are very likely to come in contact with offenders much older than themselves. The Juvenile Court is a deal of wickedness of which they have never dreamed.

For these reasons, I believe, the Juvenile Court should be a parental court. It should be held in the place of the parent who has been unable to control his child. The child should be taken down by society, and should aim to reform rather than punish.

SHE OUGHT TO MAKE THE BEST LITTLE WIFE IN THE WORLD—AND USUALLY DOES

While the saying is that almost every profession, vocation, avocation, calling and line of work is overcrowded, it is also true that the demand for household servants continues to be quite as strong as ever.

Ladies of station and of standing are still telling one another how difficult it is to get, and how much more difficult to keep, loyal and competent servants.

And the question continues to be why this should be so; why it is that girls will fly to jobs in the stores and in the shoe shops and will turn down or pass up places in domestic service which pay quite as well in cash to say nothing of the best of food and the bluest and coziest of rooms.

The girls—who, after all, should know—declare that the answer is "liberty!"

They like to be free, free and independent, these girls who sidestep housework and are glad to go to the shops and stores. They want their Sundays off, all their Sundays. They want their evenings to themselves. They desire to be, so far as may be humanly possible, their own bosses.

And there you have it.

Still, it always has seemed to us that about the cutest little girl in the world is the housemaid.

We speak of the young lady as we used to know her in the old-time melodrama.

Of course you remember the old-time melodrama, and, if you do, you MUST recall how it was always the pretty little maid who opened the show.

The curtain always rose for Act I to discover the charming maid of the Vanastorbits dusting off the furniture and tending to herself about the members of the family. If you listened hard—and if it were not for the constant slamming of parnet seats as the Alwaystates were shown to their places by the ushers—the maid generally gave you a line on all that had happened in the Vanastorbits family before the curtain rose and a straight tip on much that was about to follow. The stage maid certainly was a great help to the English and American dramatist of the 1850's.

What we liked about the young lady, however, was her pretty costume. She always wore black and white. Her gown was always very, very black; her cuffs and collars and dinky little apron very, very white.

She was a charming picture that, if we had been a girl, we certainly would have made up our mind about 1855 to be a housemaid. That being out of the question, we had unalterably decided on driving a hack—a regular hack with two (2) horses. Hence, the plan was, at that early date, to steal a hack and two (2) horses, some place and marry the first pretty housemaid who happened along with a Frohman, A. M. Palmer or Eugene Tompkins son. Something happened to bust up this schedule, as something always is happening to man-made schedules, and—

However—

Once there was a regular poet who got off a little piece which ran something like this:

We may live without wealth,
We may live without books,
But civilized man
Cannot live without cooks.

"Then be true words, Jed Simpson," but tell me why none of the poets has ever sung the praises or toasted the beauty of the housemaid.

Most writers who have condescendingly said a word or two about the housemaid have pictured her as something of a flirt, when the truth is that she is generally a self-sacrificing girl who is sending money home, taking care of her parents in their old age, or helping to send a brother or a younger sister through college.

The Boston housemaid is neat, courteous, soft-spoken, attentive, loyal and dutiful. She ought to make the best little wife in the world. Generally speaking, she does. She is hard to get, for a wife, for the reason that a Class A housemaid is guarded as jealously as the family silver. There are wealthy people all up and down this fair land who would merely yawn if you dropped in to tell them that Miss Portia has skipped out with Professor Pianola, but who would rave and yell and cut up something fearful if you tipped them off that the milkman, the letter carrier or the dog on the beat is about to tango up the middle aisle with pretty Della, the second girl.

We prefer to class them all as "housemaids," cool, second girl, governess and nurse, but our favorite is still that slender and beautiful miss who was always dusting off the furniture when the curtain went up and who seldom came back afterwards except to peek in through the portieres and say: "The carriage is waiting."

Mr. Roth, the Sunday AMERICAN artist, who, for some weeks, has been drawing types of the Boston Girl for our interesting and entertaining readers, found the young lady pictured today in the course of one of his professional strolls through the Back Bay. You must admit that she is a very pretty young woman.

The artist sauntered through the eleventh ward four times before he came back with the likeness of a housemaid. His earlier offerings indicated a strong weakness for nurse girls.

The specifications, however, called for a "housemaid," and not only that, but a housemaid of the black-and-white costume variety of the old-time melodrama.

Even if one's hopes and aspirations are knocked galaxy-west by unkind and mischievous Fate, one can still be true to one's ideals!

Have you a little housemaid in your home?
